Acknowledging Is a Learned Skill Too often people feel they are working in a vacuum, because no matter how well they perform, nobody notices. Or, if their manager notices, they make overly general comments, such as, "I appreciate your efforts" or "thanks for the good job."

Conversations on Leadership with Ken Blanchard

Acknowledging goes with talking. When you acknowledge others while talking, they feel understood. Even if you don't agree with what the other person is saying, it is important that the person feels heard. No one likes to feel trapped in a one-way conversation. Acknowledging not only allows you to assure the person that you are listening, but gives you an opportunity to interject during the conversation.
