part of everyday life in Babylon and the whole Mesopotamian region in ancient times. This essay covers the various types of magic which were performed then. The traditions, conventions, crafts etc. we know from the World of Darkness rules books for the most part did not exist at that time, but there were precursors.

Two thousand years after the end of the Neo-Assyrian and Neo-Babylonian empires (ca. 883-539 B.C.), it can be difficult to grasp Mesopotamian magic as a cultural concept. Steeped in the philosophical traditions of Western dualism, we often view magic in a binary relation to religion, yet no such distinction existed in Mesopotamia.
